Art Exhibition: Art, Activism & Advocacy

March 20 – June 11

More and more, contemporary artists are using their artistic practice as a form of activism, turning their artwork into prominent statements of advocacy for themselves, their local communities and broader global populations. Local Cleveland artists Amber Ford, Sarah Kabot and student photographers from the youth program Shooting Without Bullets are all turning their lens toward some of the biggest social issues facing our communities and our nation: race, immigration and the ways in which consumers receive and process news media. Bringing these works together at Cleveland Clinic allows us the opportunity to reflect inward, and to encourage an open dialogue about issues that directly affect our patients, visitors and caregivers—both within and outside our walls.

Art in the Afternoon
