

Advanced Practice Caregivers

What are Advanced Practice Registered Nurses (APRNs)?

APRNs are registered nurses who have received advanced training at a master's/graduate or doctoral level. APRNs provide advanced clinical care to patients, including evaluating, diagnosing, ordering tests, providing treatment, and prescribing medications. APRNs are licensed by the Boards of Nursing in the state in which they practice. Additionally, they are certified by one of several national nursing organizations.

All APRNs must complete continuing education courses to maintain their specialty certifications. They must also maintain their licensure as a Registered Nurse in order to practice.

What are Physician Assistants (PAs)?

PAs are healthcare professionals who have received advanced training at a master's level. PAs provide advanced clinical care to patients, including evaluating, diagnosing, ordering tests, providing treatment, and prescribing medications.

A PA's education is modeled on the medical school curriculum and includes the same prerequisite coursework taken by physicians. During training, PAs gain experience in specialties including family medicine, internal medicine, obstetrics/gynecology, pediatrics, emergency medicine, psychiatry, and general surgery. PAs obtain a Master's degree in PA studies.

PAs are nationally certified by the National Commission on Certification of Physician Assistants (NCCPA) and licensed to practice medicine by their state's medical board. Like physicians, PAs must complete continuing medical education courses throughout their career. PAs recertify by exam every 10 years and must maintain their state licensure as a PA in order to practice.
