

Cleveland Clinic Center for Specialized Women's Health Women's Health Fellowship

WEEKLY ROTATION SCHEDULE

- Approximately 1½ days in the Center for Specialized Women's Health (core curriculum)
- ½ day research
- 2 days in medical clinic
- 1 day various elective conferences, professional development

The two-year curriculum promotes a comprehensive clinical understanding of women's health that is interdisciplinary in its nature. Although the fellowship is administered through the Obstetrics and Gynecology Institute and the Medicine Institute, several other departments and institutes participate in training.

At Cleveland Clinic, we embrace the women's health leadership triad:

- Clinical skills
- Focused research
- Interdisciplinary education

With this triad, our program is designed to create the women's health leadership of the future.

Clinical Skills

A core element of the fellowship is for women's health scholars to develop their clinical skills alongside experienced healthcare providers including women's health internists, gynecologists, breast care providers, endocrinologists, radiologists and others. This practice leverages the diverse resources of Cleveland Clinic, including the Center for Specialized Women's Health on the main campus, and women-centered practices at regional family health centers.

Focused Research

It is important for the scholar to understand the application of research skills in an interdisciplinary arena. We ensure that the Women's Health Fellowship program takes advantage of the core strengths of Cleveland Clinic by guiding scholars toward areas such as cardiovascular diseases in women, breast cancer, osteoporosis and other disciplines based upon the specific interests of the scholar.

Interdisciplinary Education

By definition, women's health cuts across multiple specialty areas. The Women's Health Fellowship targets key areas for deeper knowledge into disease states as they affect women throughout their lives. The program encourages scholarly activity through local and national conferences, CME courses or other professional and leadership courses as they become available.
